ABSTRACT

Non-market valuation involves use of different techniques to value environmental (dis)amenities which are not traded in the markets. This talk will present an overview of such methods and will discuss some case studies that involve valuation of recreational benefits from the environment. Such services from nature have high demand, but have no market regulation and may disappear in course of time if conservation measures are not put in place. Environmental valuation can help to prioritize the conservation of these places and use them as developmental resource for the area.
